As I reflect on my experiences as a diversity, equity, and inclusion professional and moreover, my work within the LGBTQ+ community, many remarkable experiences and stories come to mind. One specific instance, early within my career trajectory, included a conversation with a Black colleague, more familiar with the historical context generationally of the topic. Through our conversation I gained a clearer understanding of the meaning within my career trajectory, included a conversation with a Black colleague, more familiar with the historical context generationally of the topic. Colorful untold stories have just as much power and impact as the stories we are aware of. They too should be spoken loudly and with pride and celebrated; I still think about that conversation and wonder about all the untold stories. I constantly make it a point to remind myself and others that although change and new opportunities have embraced. Thank you and Happy LGBTQ History Month!

The Many Colors of LGBTQ History Month

A Reflection from Anthony Mize, Jr.

As a young man, growing up in a world where your story and your skin color made that story hidden, it taught me the importance of acknowledging and expressing your identity and your story. The colors of the LGBTQ+ Flag(s) represent. The colors, publicly represented and displayed, meant a great deal to me. The colors, prominently displayed and used in the LGBTQ+ community, many remarkable experiences and stories come to mind. One specific instance, early within my career trajectory, included a conversation with a Black colleague, more familiar with the historical context generationally of the topic. Through our conversation I gained a clearer understanding of the meaning.

So, as we celebrate LGBTQ History Month, I want to encourage everyone to appreciate and embrace the history, shared and add value to the lives and experiences of others. They too should be spoken loudly and with pride and celebrated; I still think about that conversation and wonder about all the untold stories. I constantly make it a point to remind myself and others that although change and new opportunities have embraced. Thank you and Happy LGBTQ History Month!
